

Pelvic Ultrasound

Women & Childrens Ultrasound Department

What is pelvic ultrasound?

This is an examination using ultrasound (high frequency sound waves) to examine the lower abdomen and pelvis.

How is an ultrasound scan performed?

You will normally be given a booked appointment. You will be asked to attend with a full bladder by drinking approximately 1½ pints of fluid one hour prior to the appointment (avoid fizzy drinks). Remember not to empty your bladder until after your ultrasound scan.

A trained operator will perform this examination using specialised equipment.

You will be asked to lie on a couch and some ultrasound gel will be placed on the lower part of your abdomen. A small ultrasound probe will be passed over your lower abdomen (tummy) to create an image of the pelvis on the television monitor.

Sometimes, in order to obtain better quality images and therefore improve diagnosis, we will perform a transvaginal scan.

How is a transvaginal scan performed?

First, you will be asked to empty your bladder and then return to the ultrasound examination room. You will be asked to take off your pants. It is not necessary to take off a skirt, dress, shirt or jumper. Wearing a shirt or long jumper is often easier. Following this, you will be asked to lie down and your lower body will be covered with a sheet. A small ultrasound probe is covered with a disposable sheath and then the probe placed in the vagina. Images of the pelvis, in particular, the uterus and ovaries, are obtained. This usually takes approximately 5 minutes.

This procedure may occasionally be uncomfortable, but is not usually painful.

Please let the sonographer know if you have an allergy to latex prior to the transvaginal scan.

Should I have a transvaginal examination?

If you do not wish to have an internal examination, then this will not be performed. However, the transvaginal scan may provide useful additional information.

For younger women and children, a transvaginal examination will not be performed.

The prevention of infection is a major priority in all healthcare and everyone has a part to play.

- Please decontaminate your hands frequently for 20 seconds using soap and water or alcohol gel if available
- If you have symptoms of diarrhoea and/or vomiting, cough or other respiratory symptoms, a temperature or any loss of taste or smell please do not visit the hospital or any other care facility and seek advice from 111
- Keep the environment clean and tidy
- Let's work together to keep infections out of our hospitals and care homes.

How long does it take?

The complete examination takes about 20 minutes.

If you do not come with a full bladder or if you arrive late, you may have to re-book your appointment.

Please note you will not be able to bring children into the scan room with you.

What happens next?

The sonographer sends the scan report to the doctor who referred you. If this is your GP, the results will be available in 7-10 days at your GP surgery. If you are referred from a consultant, the results will be sent back to them within 7 days.

Are there any complications to the test?

This examination uses ultrasound, which is high frequency sound waves and has no known harmful effect. It is safe in early pregnancy when performed by trained operators.

How can I get more information?

Please ask the sonographer any questions you may have before the examination.
